Dear Mr. Britt and Ms. Witmer:

As Mayor of San Diego and as a loyal fan of our sports teams, I have followed closely your dealings with FOX Sports regarding broadcast of the San Diego Padres games. It is with great disappointment that I have learned your company is no closer to reaching an agreement with FOX Sports for the 2013 Season. San Diegans that rely on you for cable service were forced to go the entire 2012 baseball season without being able to watch their hometown team, and as the 2013 season draws near, it appears Time Warner Cable is still not planning to offer Padres baseball to these customers.

I understand that companies must make decisions that are in the best interest of their bottom line. That said, when every other major video provider in the region has reached an agreement with FOX Sports and your network has ceased discussions, one is left questioning Time Warner Cable's true motivations.

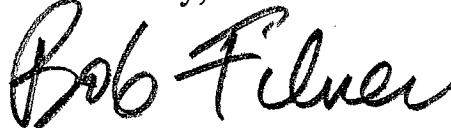

It has been widely reported that Time Warner Cable has been aggressively acquiring sports programming rights in Los Angeles, and while this approach is not my concern, it does cast a shadow over your intentions in San Diego. The civic camaraderie that sports teams bring to an area cannot be overstated. As Mayor, I will do everything in my power to ensure San Diegans around the region are able to follow and support our hometown baseball team.

I strongly urge you to reconsider your current decision not to provide your customers with Padres baseball this season, and act in a manner deserving of your customers' trust and continued business.

Rest assured, I will continue to monitor this situation and am prepared to take the steps necessary to bring about a resolution prior to the 2013 baseball season.

Sincerely,
